Reagan did it first: why does it matter? Traditionally, U.S. medical education focuses on educating residents in primary care (i.e., family medicine) and thus producing trained primary care practitioners. Recent physician shortages, however, have led educators to consider producing an equally sufficient group of medical specialists. The typical career of a generalist leads one to wonder whether such an emphasis is financially or even educationally wise. This paper deals with the implications of specialization and the negative impact that a shortage in the generalist pool may have on people in medically underserved communities. It argues that the role of generalists in medicine cannot be underestimated or undervalued. Specialization does not eliminate the need for generalists in a number of situations, and in some areas, only generalists will provide certain levels of care or services. Medicine is neither purely research-oriented nor solely service-oriented. The mission of the medical school, medical schools, and medical specialties must be to assure the availability of medical care for the underserved regardless of specialty.Q: How to display both static content and dynamic content in mdm app I am using md chart to display the data which is retrieved by the API. but some of the data will vary based on the current date. I would like to display both the static content (recent data) and the dynamic content (today's data). but only static content will be displayed by default till the data is retrieved from API. I have tried a static div element with id's, style, etc which is now displaying static data. the problem is it is displayed till the data is retrieved from API then it disappears. if I provide a second div element which contains only the code for the dynamic data, then only the dynamic data is displayed and it disappears when the data is retrieved from the API. can somebody please help me to display static content with a div tag which gets data from API and disappears when the data is retrieved? A: One solution is to keep the code for the static content inside a separate script file. You then need to attach the appropriate part of the page (or download in the case of a mobile app) to the sections
